

(1)

<I agree with this opinion that industrialized countries have responsibilities to help developing countries modernize.>

(2)

<I have two reasons for believing this.>

(3)

<First, a lot of people in developing countries are facing serious problems like starvation and poverty. Due to these causes, most residents cannot avoid escaping death. This is a miserable problem. If these countries, however, succeed in modernization and adaptation to advanced ways of lives; and can produce nutritional food and good qualities of other materials, their lives will be improved. Thus, the duty of the industrialized countries is helping these poor countries change their bad situations into beneficial ones.>

Second, industrialized countries should realize that their current prosperity is dependent on their resources. Without essential things like fossil fuels, today's satisfying (fulfilling) lives in advanced nations would not be possible. Thus, the benefits these resources can create should not be occupied (monopolized) by only industrialized countries. It is obviously fair to share the fruits of modernization in order to encourage all people proceed in a peaceful way.

(12)

<For these reasons, I think industrialized countries should support developing countries to develop even more.>
